

Lou Pearlman Tickets Gets No Takers

Contributed by Lou Pearlman Writer
Monday, 10 September 2007

How much does Orlando love its Magic? Maybe not as much as diehard fans think. An attempt to sell indicted boy-band impresario Lou Pearlman's reservation for a block of eight basketball season tickets was a flop, leaving a U.S. Bankruptcy Court trustee to conclude that the ticket-purchase option is unmarketable. The trustee was able to sell a vast array of other Pearlman booty, including guns, cars and even clothing. But an option to buy Magic tickets? Nah. Maybe it was the price. The option is just a right to buy the seats, which run more than $4,000 a piece.

posted from the Orlando Sentinel

How much does Orlando love its Magic? Maybe not as much as diehard fans think. An attempt to sell indicted boy-band impresario Lou Pearlman's reservation for a block of eight basketball season tickets was a flop, leaving a U.S. Bankruptcy Court trustee to conclude that the ticket-purchase option is unmarketable. The trustee was able to sell a vast array of other Pearlman booty, including guns, cars and even clothing. But an option to buy Magic tickets? Nah. Maybe it was the price. The option is just a right to buy the seats, which run more than $4,000 a piece.

posted from the Orlando Sentinel