

LOU: NO TOWEL COULD FIT ME

Contributed by Lou Pearlman Writer
Tuesday, 23 October 2007

October 10, 2007 -- DISGRACED boy band founder Lou Pearlman - who created *NSYNC and the Backstreet Boys and launched Justin Timberlake's career - is finally speaking out about the Vanity Fair article that depicted him as a pervy pedophile. Pearlman - who was accused of inappropriate behavior with Nick Carter and wrestling boys in a towel that conveniently fell off - told Radaronline's Tyler Gray the VF story is "one-sided." "I think Vanity (un)Fair sought out anyone who had a lawsuit or grudge with me or my company to help make disparaging remarks. They never sought any proof or checked for accuracy," Pearlman said. He denies any sexual misconduct. As for the towel incident, porcine Pearlman told Gray, who is writing a book on true crime and boy bands, that the story was made up: "I've never owned a towel that could wrap all the way around me anyway." A Vanity Fair spokeswoman said, "Mr. Pearlman's comments are ludicrous. We stand by our story."